YOUR PET IS NOW PREGNANT

and you have no idea how to proceed?

"What will change?"

"What type of care do they need?"

"Will this affect their behavior?"

All of it can be quite overwhelming, especially for a first-time pet owner!

As stressful as that can be, there's no need to worry.

We're here to help!

This booklet will provide you with all the information you need on how to better navigate your pet's pregnancy.

DISCLAIMER:

This book applies to pets who have had at least some successful training and aren't outright aggressive or self-destructive. For outlier circumstances such as these, please seek a licensed pet angel veterinarian or a pet angel behavioral specialist.

SHOULD I GET MY PET PREGNANT?

If your pet is already pregnant, you may skip this chapter if you'd like, but the information here might still be valuable to you.

It's known that pets were originally meant to carry children, but nowadays many have different purposes. People use them for recreation, companionship, sexual relief and even as decoration. Still, if a demon wants to have children, the most common way of achieving that is impregnating their own pet.

That, however, has it's downsides.

First of all, it will permanently alter your pet. A pet angel who has never been pregnant will typically have a slightly different body shape. Although this may be more noticeable on pets who have less body fat, it does affect them all regardless.

After their first delivery, their bodies will "understand" that they are fit for breeding and, in turn, will change accordingly. Most of these changes are internal but some are still visible to the naked eye. Notably, they'll likely store more body fat in their bellies and their hips will widen. This serves to protect their wombs from any outside impact and to make birthing easier, respectively.

Sometimes the extra fat will show on their thighs and arms as well, but it's likely just a side effect of womb protection. There also significant change to their breast tissue, but that can be easily reversed with minor surgery if the owner desires.

While yes, they're very small changes, it's good to know there in advance. It's the only way you can make a truly informed decision! There are also possible behavioural consequences, but those will be discussed later. Because of these factors, some people get themselves a pet just for reproduction so they don't risk the ones they're already attached to. That's something to consider as well.

Second, and most important, a pregnancy is a very serious commitment. Remember, there are actual children inside your pet who will most likely grow up to be people, not pets. It's your job as an owner to look after them starting at conception! A pet cannot be held responsible for such things (they're just pets after all). Do not get your pet pregnant if you're not ready to care for another person!!

Third, there's always the risk that you end up with bad luck and your pet never gives birth to any demons. Remember, when a pet gives birth to angels they aren't considered your kids, they need to be sent south to be raised by other angels. That can usually be solved with IVF, but it's something to keep in mind if you intend on doing this naturally.

If you're ready to take on the challenges (and joys!) of parenthood, then keep on reading. If not, that's ok too, this book will always be here when you need it!

GETTING A PET PREGNANT

All it takes for a pet to become pregnant is for a demon to mate with it once. It's that easy!

Pets ovulate (meaning that they release at least one egg from their ovaries) when semen reaches the end of their fallopian tubes and comes in contact with the receptors there, which in turn will stimulate their ovaries.

For this to happen, their whole womb must first be filled up with it semen. It's a very intuitive process but we'll explain just in case.

In order for a demon to fill up a pet, their entrance needs to be plugged completely, that's what knots are. Make sure that you are fully sheathed inside of them when it starts to expand, or leakage might happen upon ejaculation.

Any leakage is not normal (provided you have properly knotted them), if it is happening, contact a qualified pet angel veterinarian. Cum is only supposed to flow out after the pet is unplugged.

Provided your pet doesn't have any fertility issues, one load is more than enough to get them pregnant. Those, however, are rare, so remember to uninstall any birth control devices you might have forgotten before investigating.

It's possible to induce more than one ovulation. Until one of the fertilized eggs adheres to their uterine wall, their ovary receptors will keep working. This will result in multiple babies, so be mindful of both your pet's size, as smaller pets cannot carry more than two demon fetuses.

It's safe to mate with your pet again 24hrs after breeding without the risk of additional pregnancies.
